INTRODUCTION

- Democrats vs. Republicans
 - Balance of power

DEMOCRATS VS. REPUBLICANS

The Democrats and the Republicans are the most dominant political parties in the United States.

DEMOCRATS

- Liberal
- Supports a larger government role in economic and social issues
- Favors progressive tax
- Pursues multilateralism
- Seeks greater freedoms

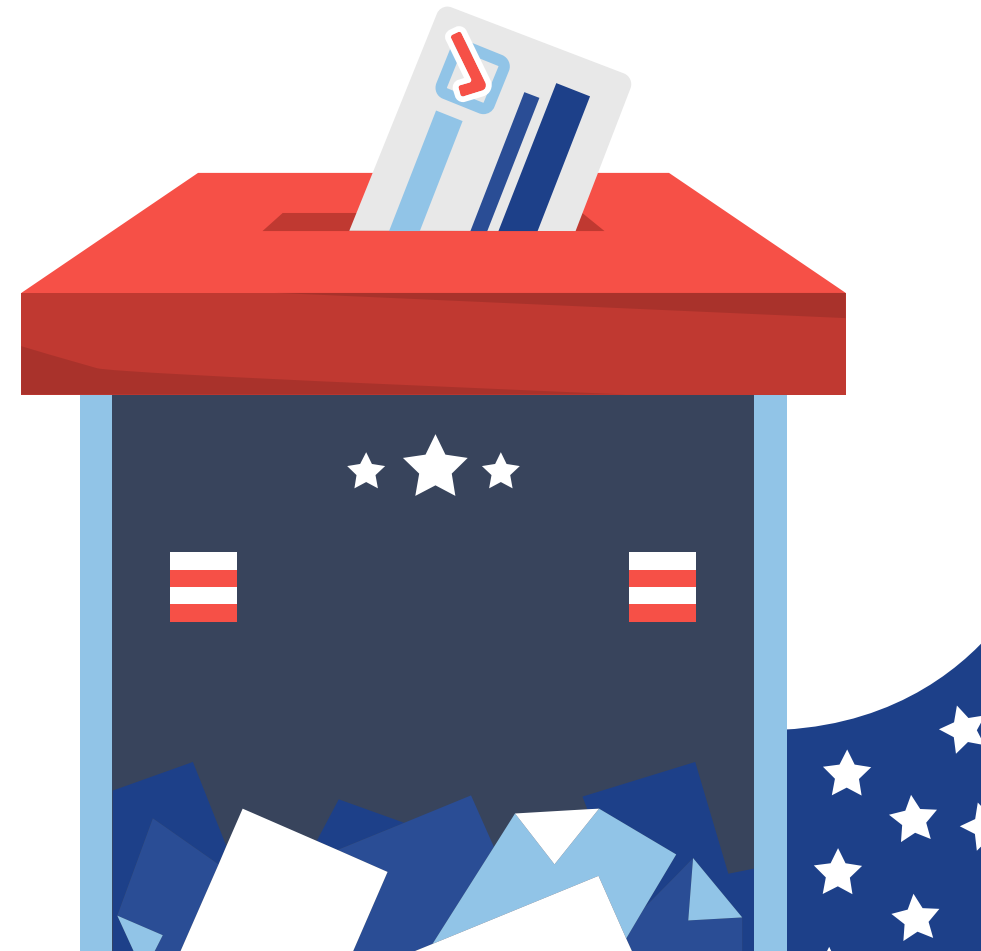

REPUBLICANS

- Conservative
- Supports a smaller government role that is less involved in economy
- Favors lower taxes
- Pursues national security interests
- Follows more traditional values

BALANCE OF POWER

This analysis examines the balance of power between the two parties through understanding the popular vote, the electoral college, and voter loyalty.

Which party dominates?

★ 02 ★

THE POPULAR VOTE

- Dominance of the Democrats
 - But, does this guarantee a win?

NUMBER OF VOTES BY PARTY

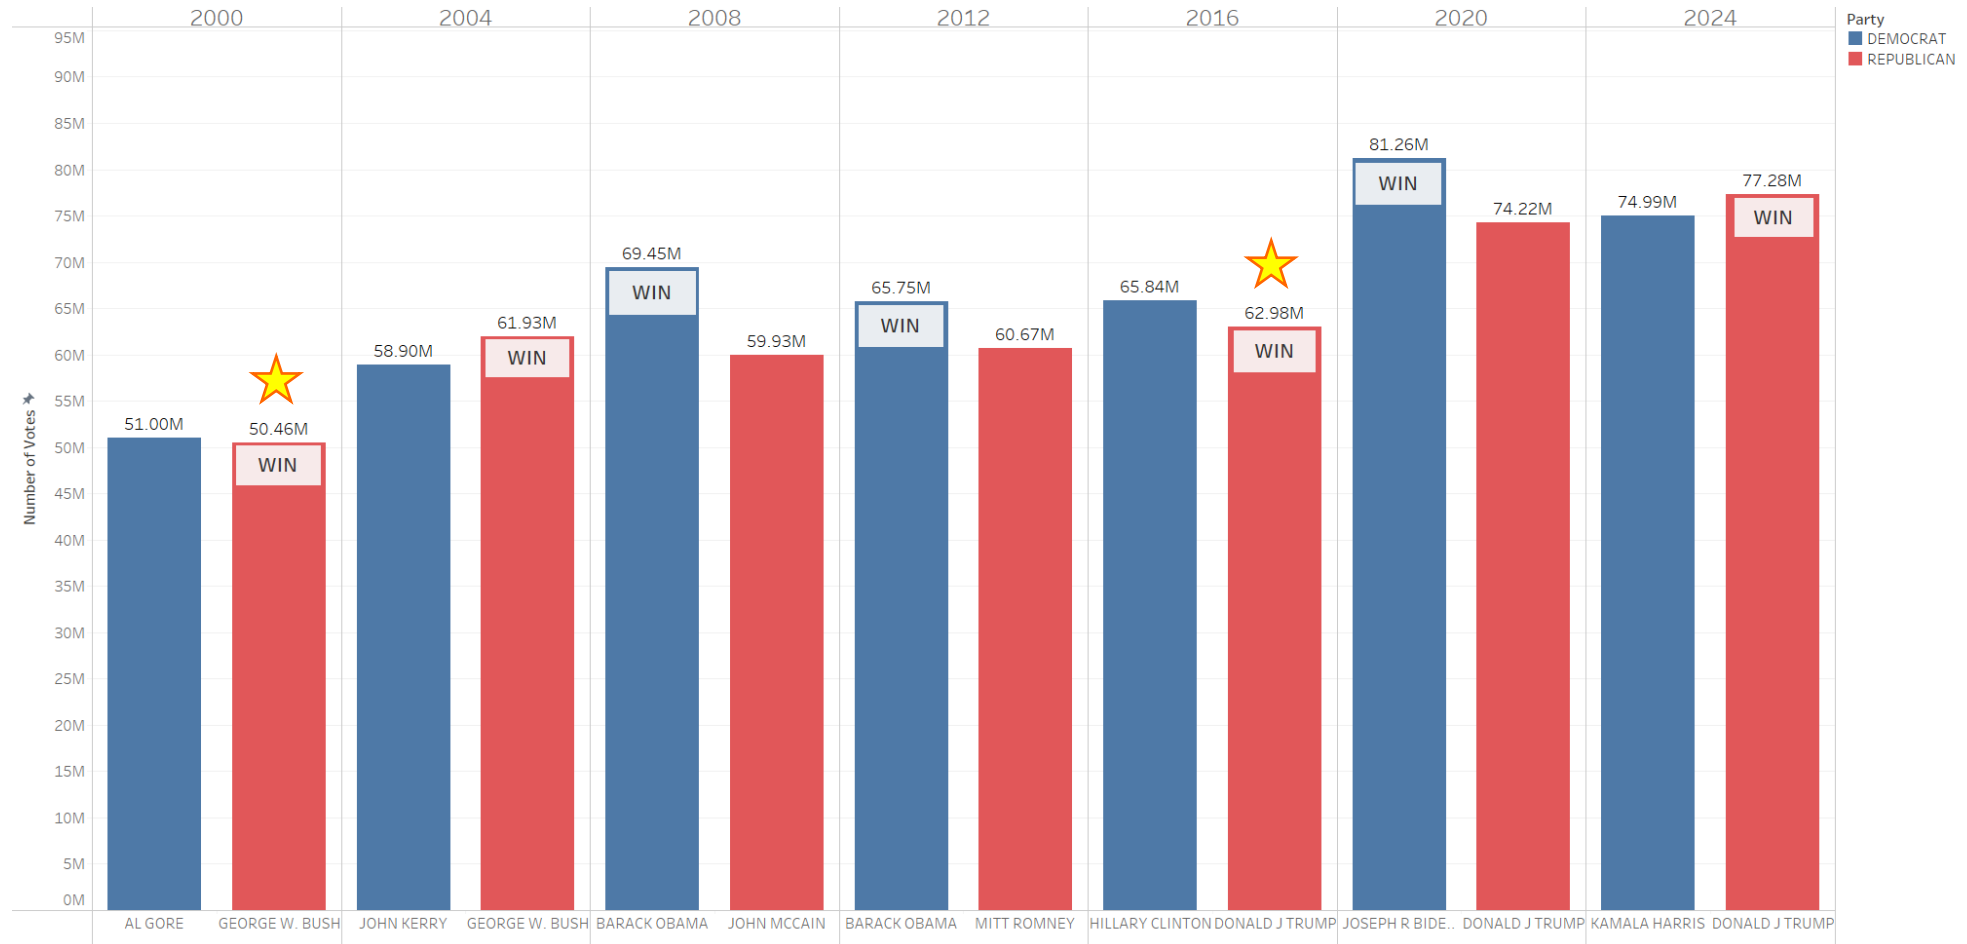

Overall, the Democrats have dominated the number of votes received.

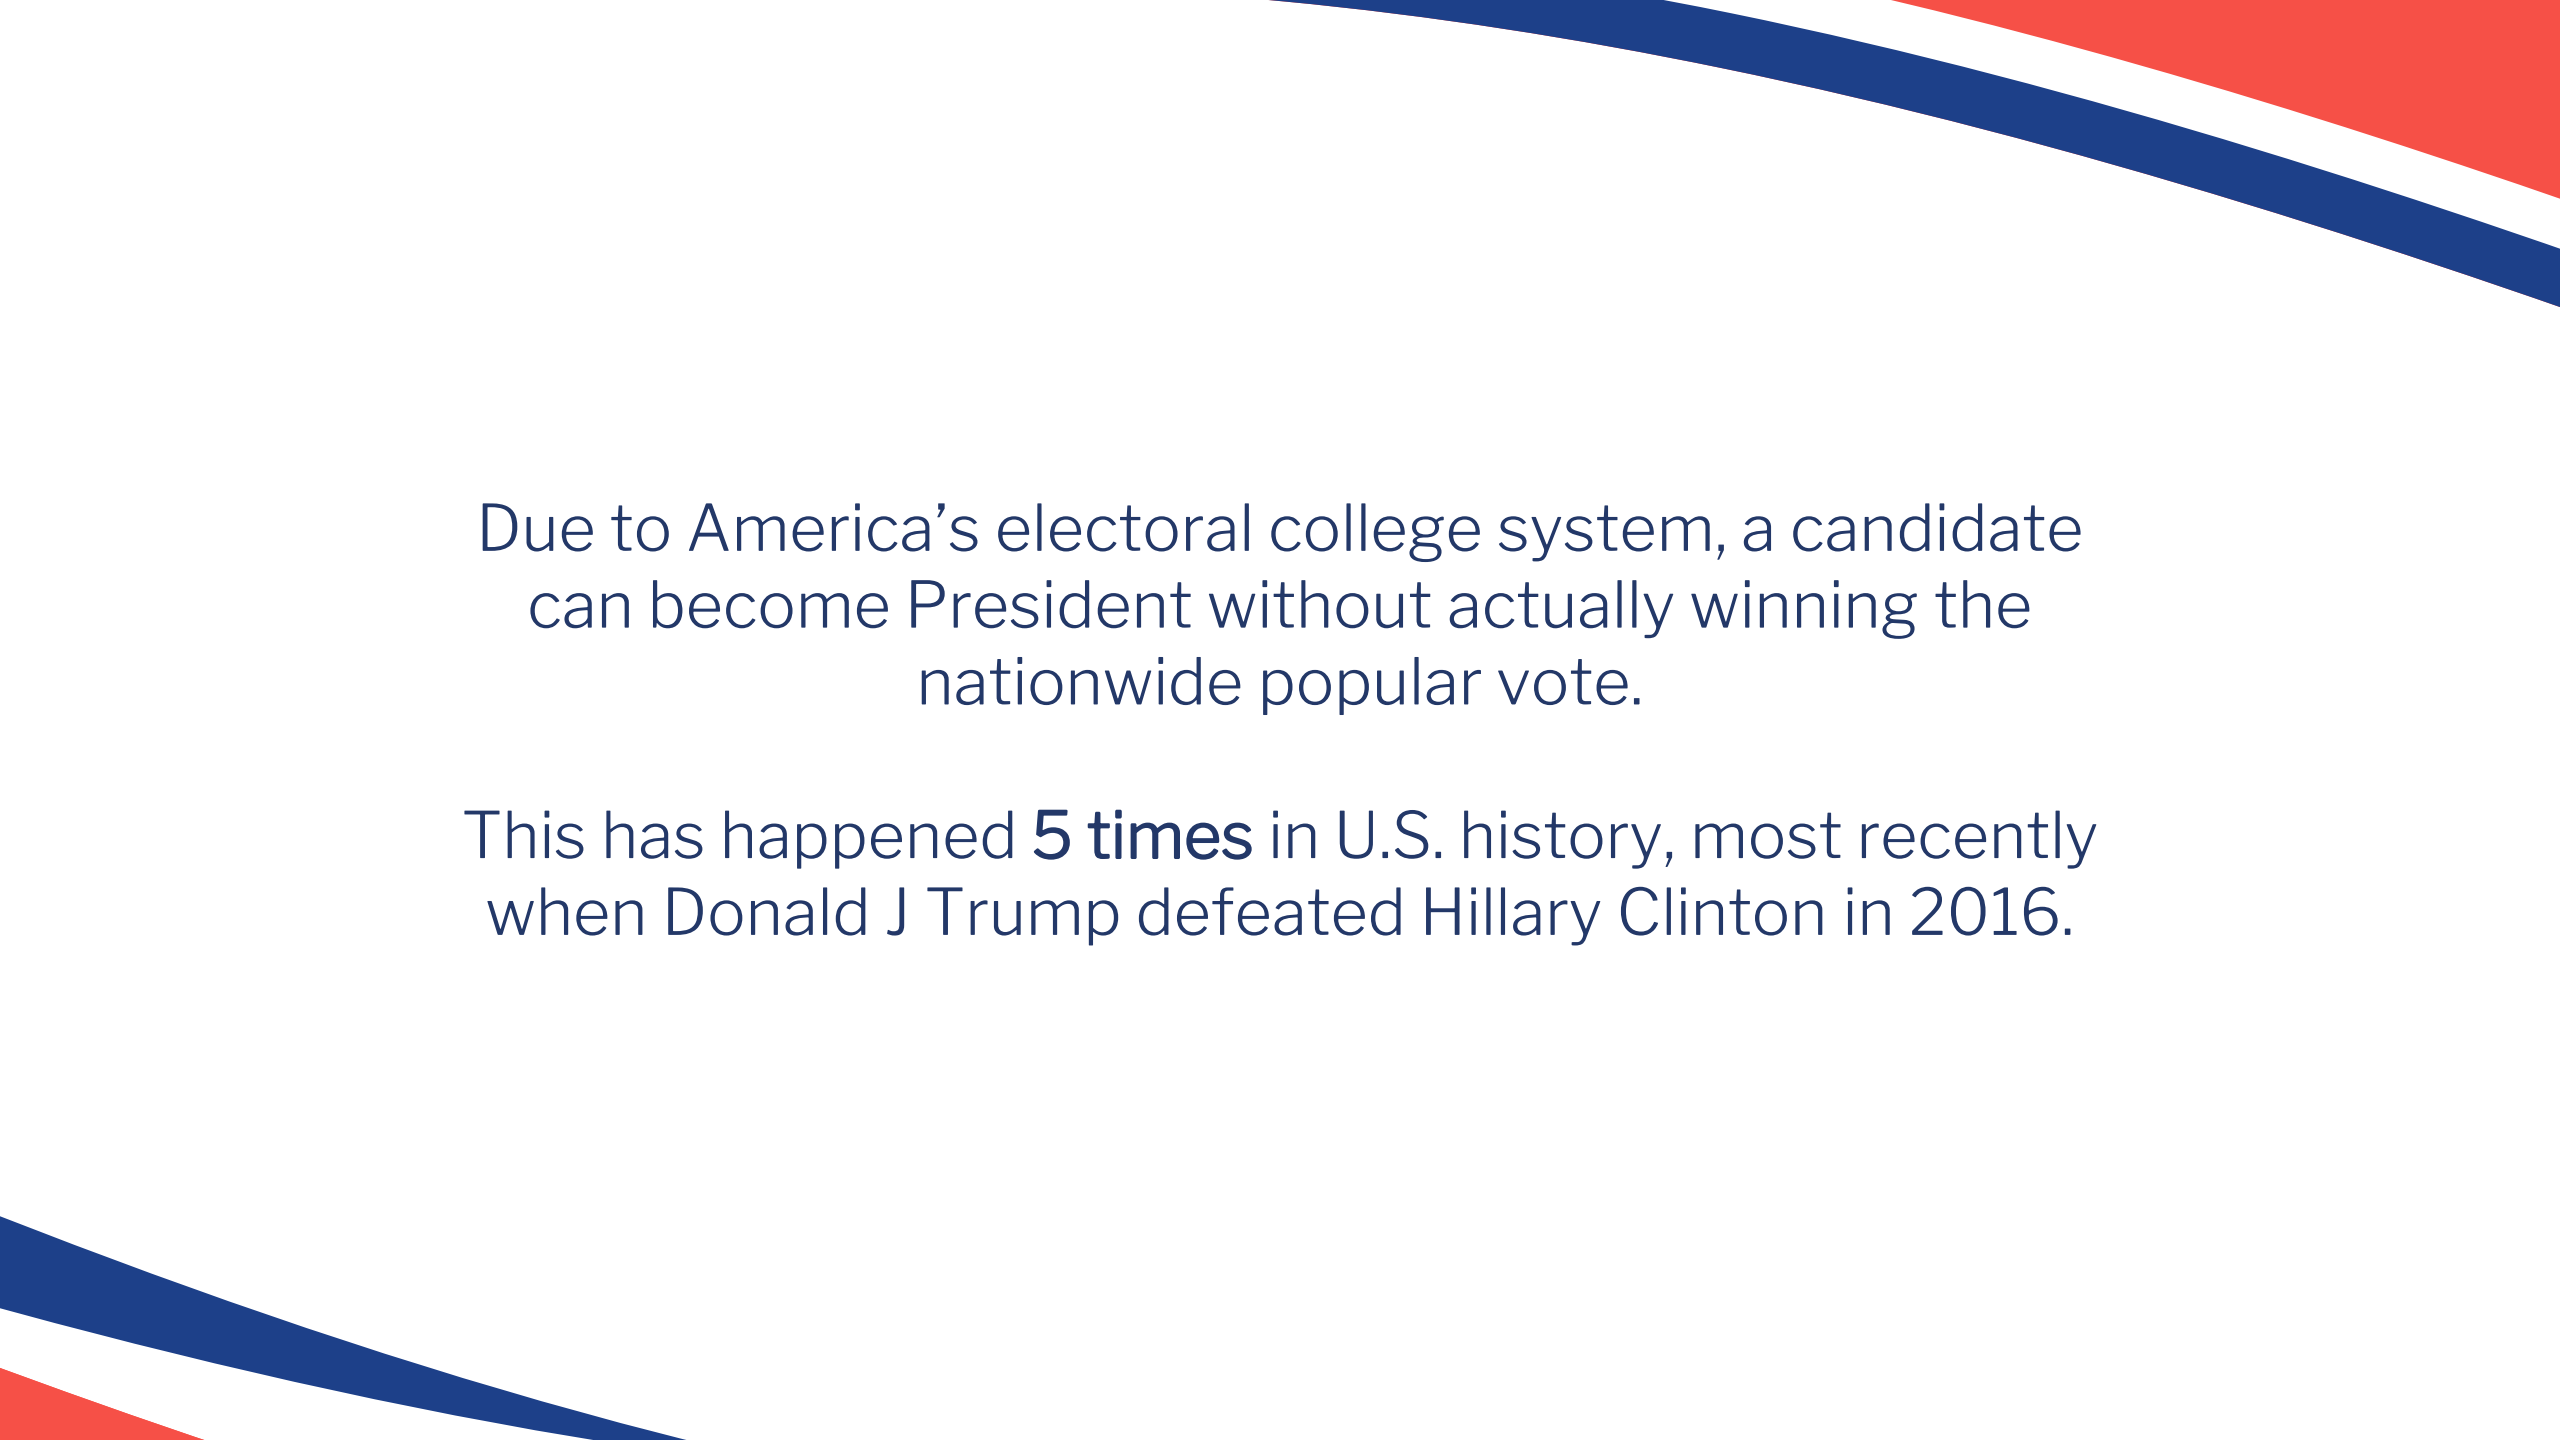

Joseph Biden is the most voted President in the 21st century

THE POPULAR VOTE DOES NOT GUARANTEE A WIN

Republicans George W. Bush and Donald J Trump won in 2000 and 2016 with less votes.

Due to America's electoral college system, a candidate can become President without actually winning the nationwide popular vote.

This has happened 5 times in U.S. history, most recently when Donald J Trump defeated Hillary Clinton in 2016.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

- The importance of electoral votes
 - Electoral strongholds

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE (2024)

Each state has a different number of electoral votes that is awarded to whoever wins the poll in the state.

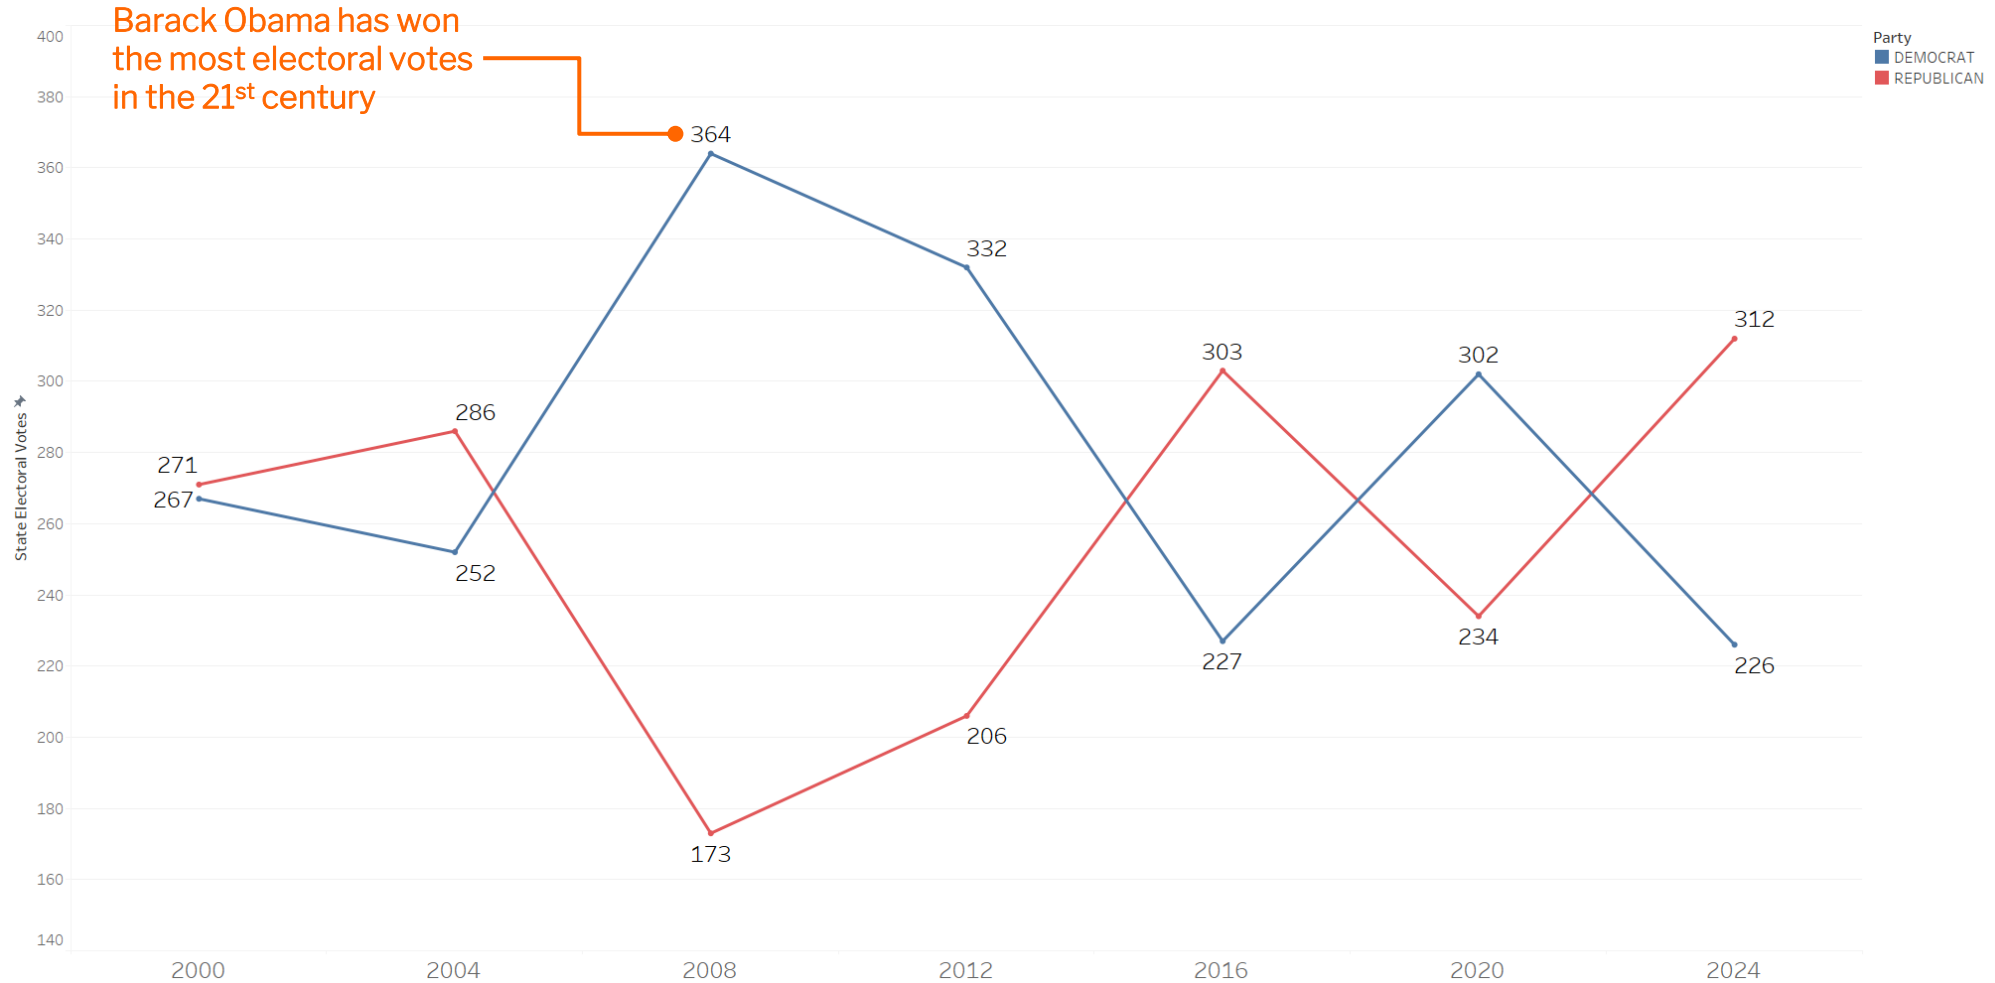

NUMBER OF ELECTORAL VOTES

The candidate that wins majority of the electoral votes
(270 or more) wins the election.

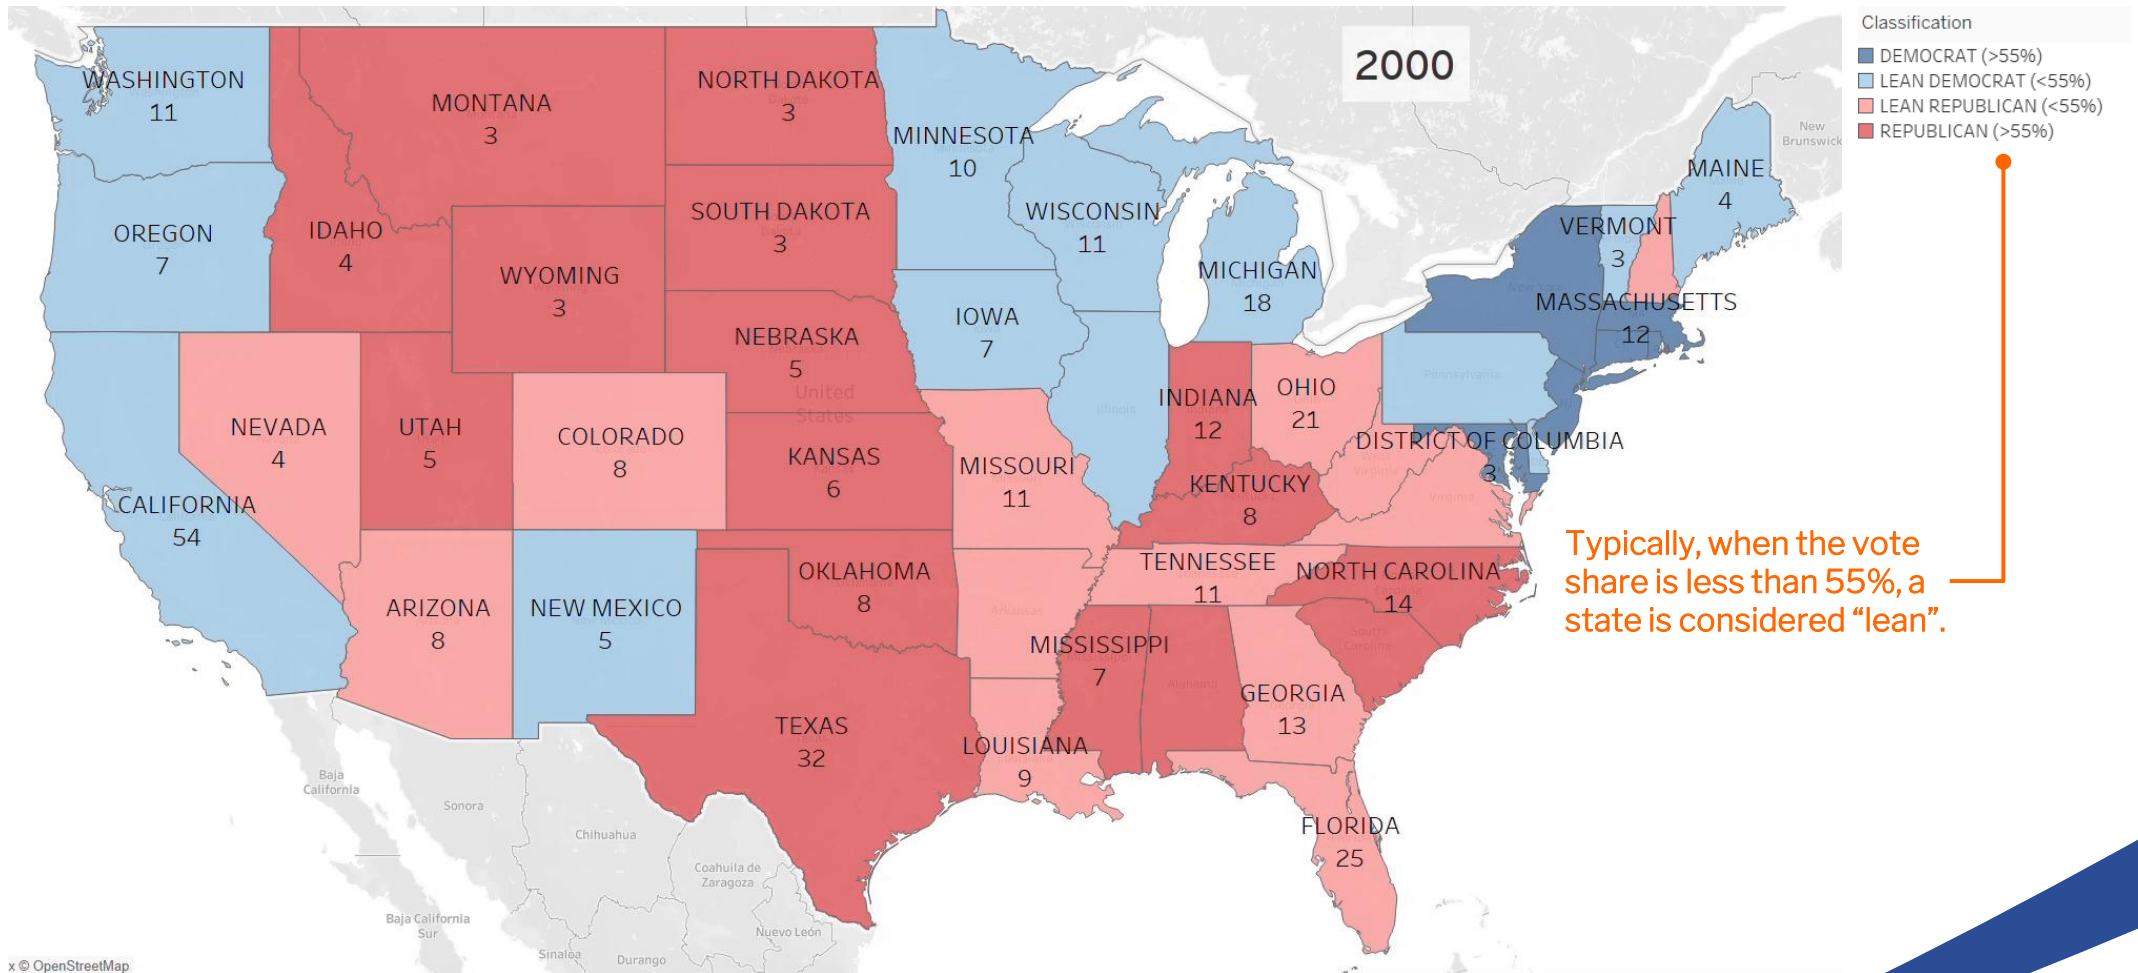

NUMBER OF ELECTORAL VOTES BY PARTY

Overall, the dominance of the Democrats and Republicans shifts with each election.

ELECTORAL STRONGHOLDS

Over the years, the Democrats usually win the Mid-Atlantic states and the West Coast, while the Republicans usually win the mountain states, the Great Plains, and the South.

★ 04 ★

LOYALTY

- Most loyal states and counties
 - Dominance of the Republicans

MOST LOYAL STATES

Based on number of wins in each state, the Republicans have more loyal states than the Democrats.

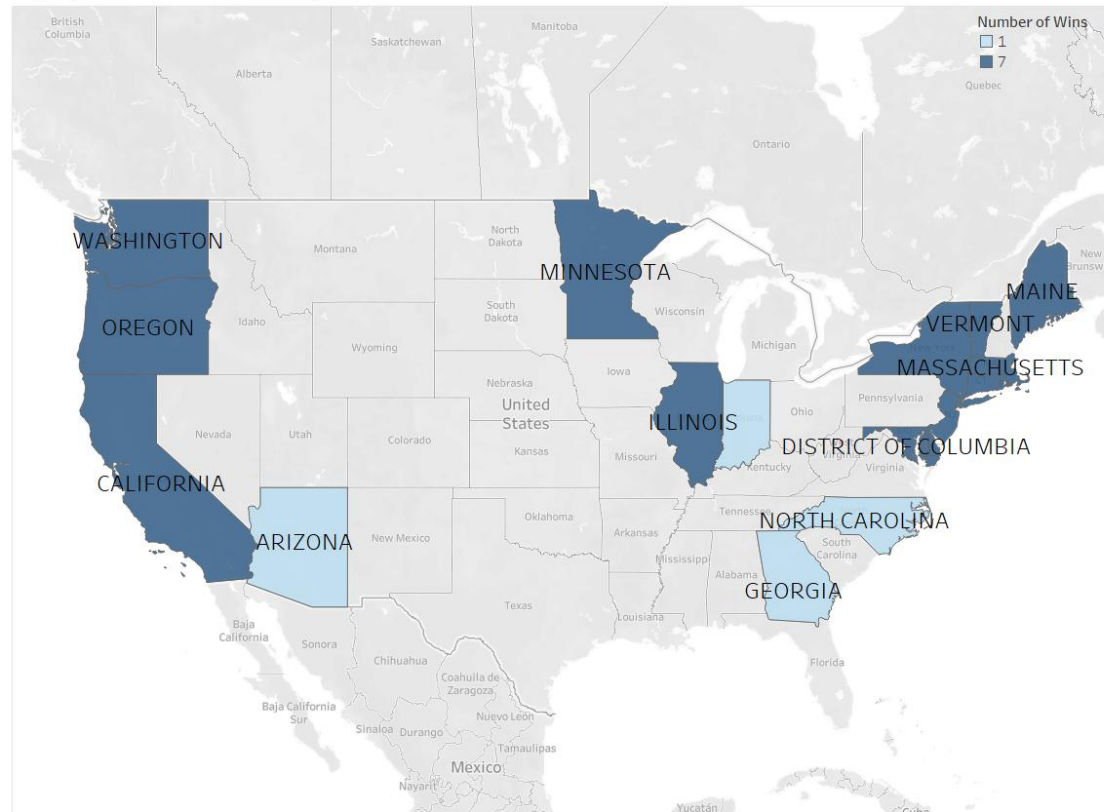

Most Loyal
9 states
Democrats Won
7 of 7 elections

Least Loyal
6 states
Democrats Won
1 of 7 elections

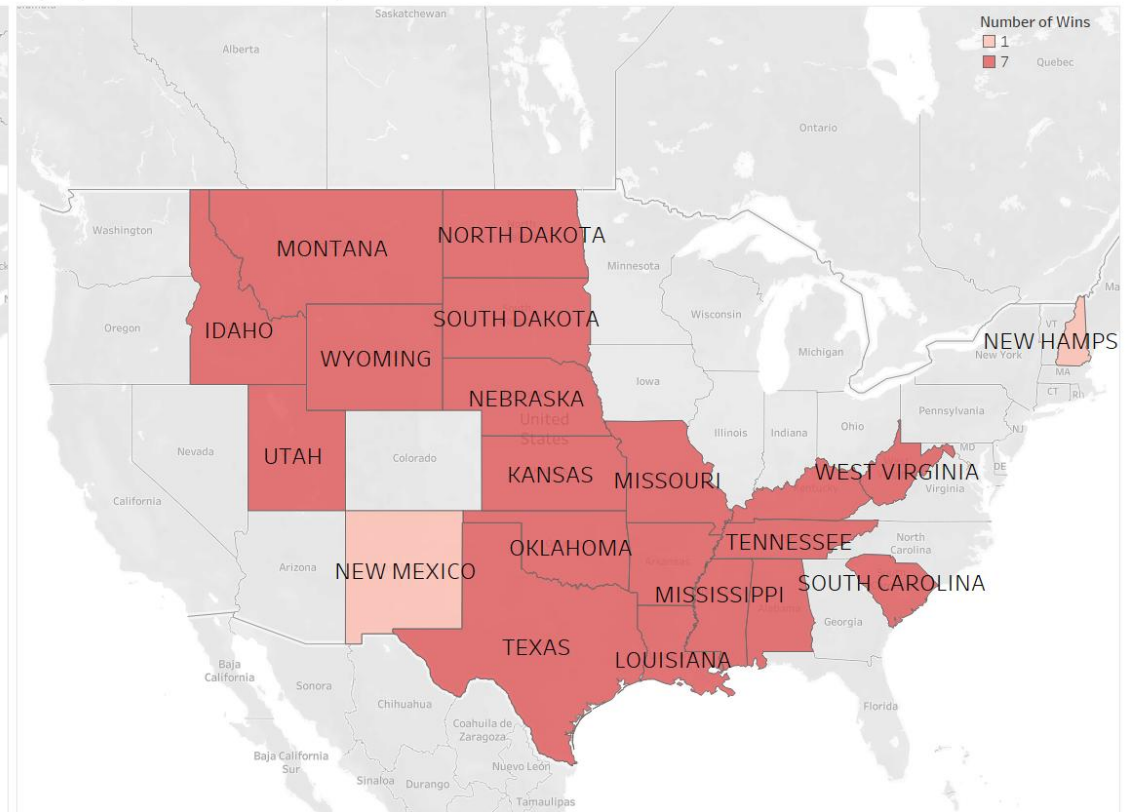

Most Loyal
16 states
Republicans Won
7 of 7 elections

Least Loyal
11 states
Republicans Won
1 of 7 elections

Loyalty: Democrats Have Less Loyal States

Loyalty: Republicans Have More Loyal States

MOST LOYAL COUNTIES

Based on number of wins in each county, the Republicans have more loyal counties than the Democrats.

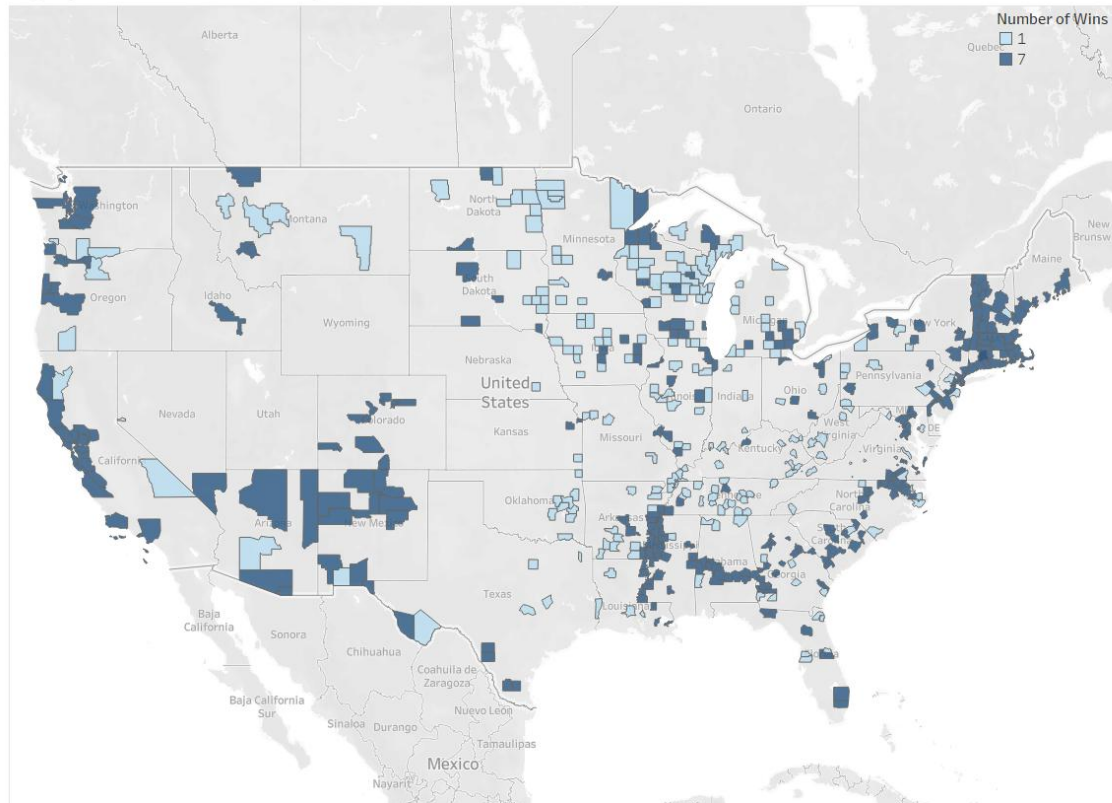

Most Loyal
311 counties
Democrats Won
7 of 7 elections

Least Loyal
245 counties
Democrats Won
1 of 7 elections

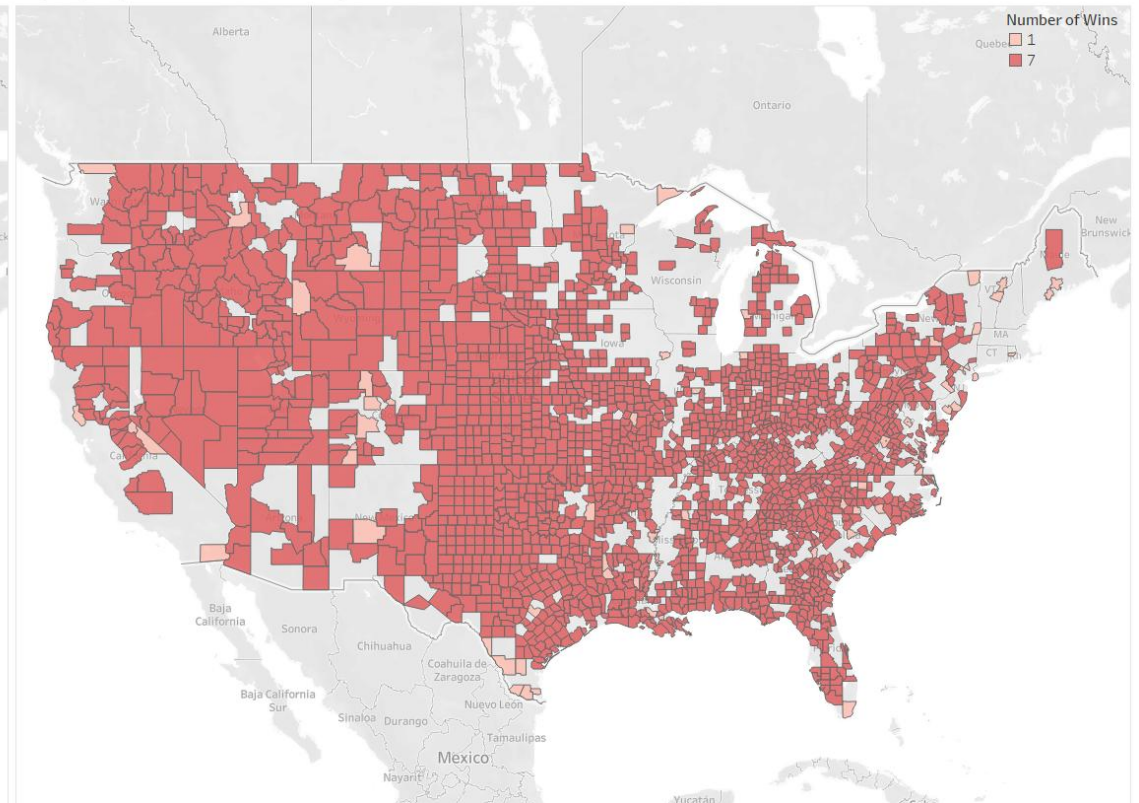

Most Loyal
2066 counties
Republicans Won
7 of 7 elections

Least Loyal
74 counties
Republicans Won
1 of 7 elections

Loyalty: Democrats Have Less Loyal Counties

Loyalty: Republicans Have More Loyal Counties

The prior analyses highlight a deeply divided electorate.

The Democrats dominate the popular vote, but the Republicans have significantly more loyal voters.

The Democrats usually win the Mid-Atlantic states and the West Coast, but the Republicans usually win the mountain states, the Great Plains, and the South.

This shows that the balance of power between the two parties is rather dynamic; no party is more dominant than the other.

So, what is the key to winning?

★ 05 ★

RECOMMENDATIONS

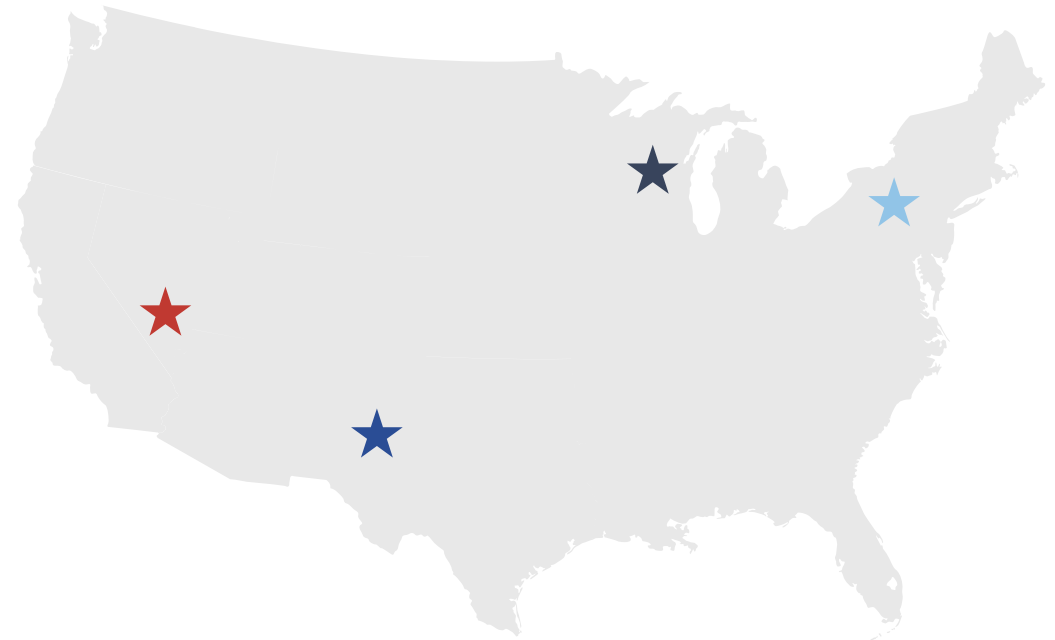

- What does it take to win?
- Battlegrounds as the key

BATTLEGROUND STATES

Battleground states have less loyal voters and can reasonably be won by either party.

Importantly, these states usually hold a significant number of electoral votes.

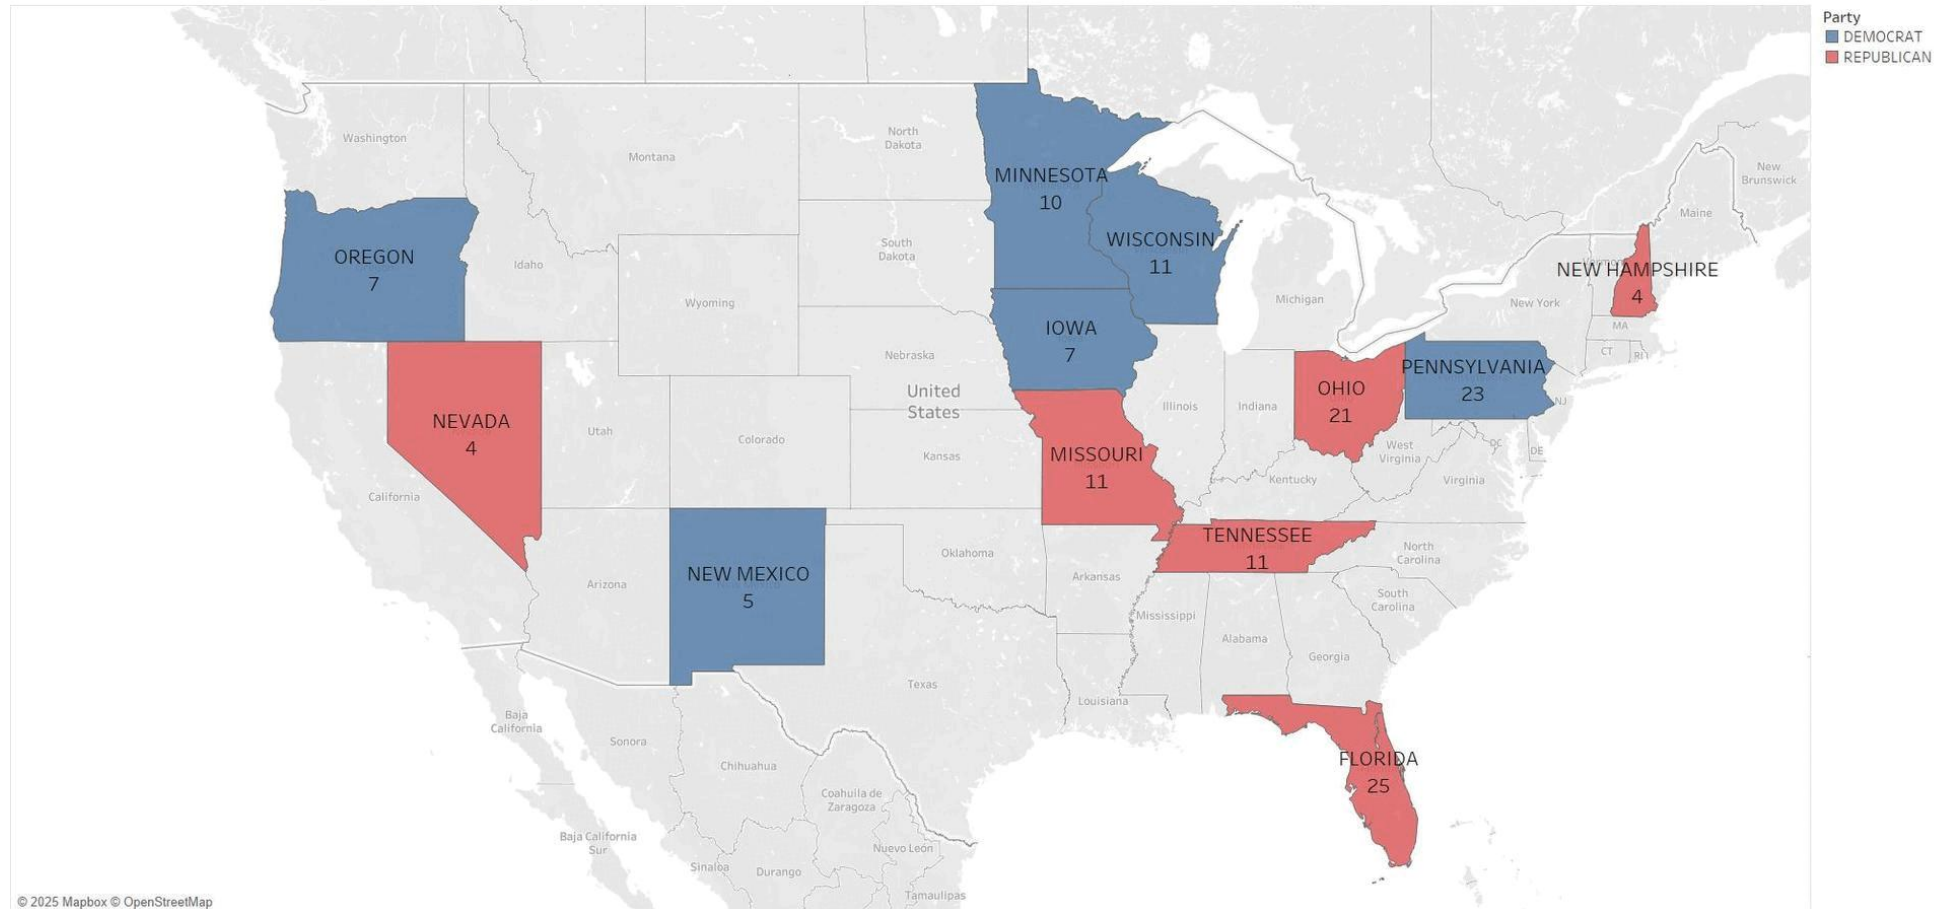

By focusing on battleground states, candidates can seek to sway voters and gain electoral votes.

BATTLEGROUND STATES ARE CRUCIAL

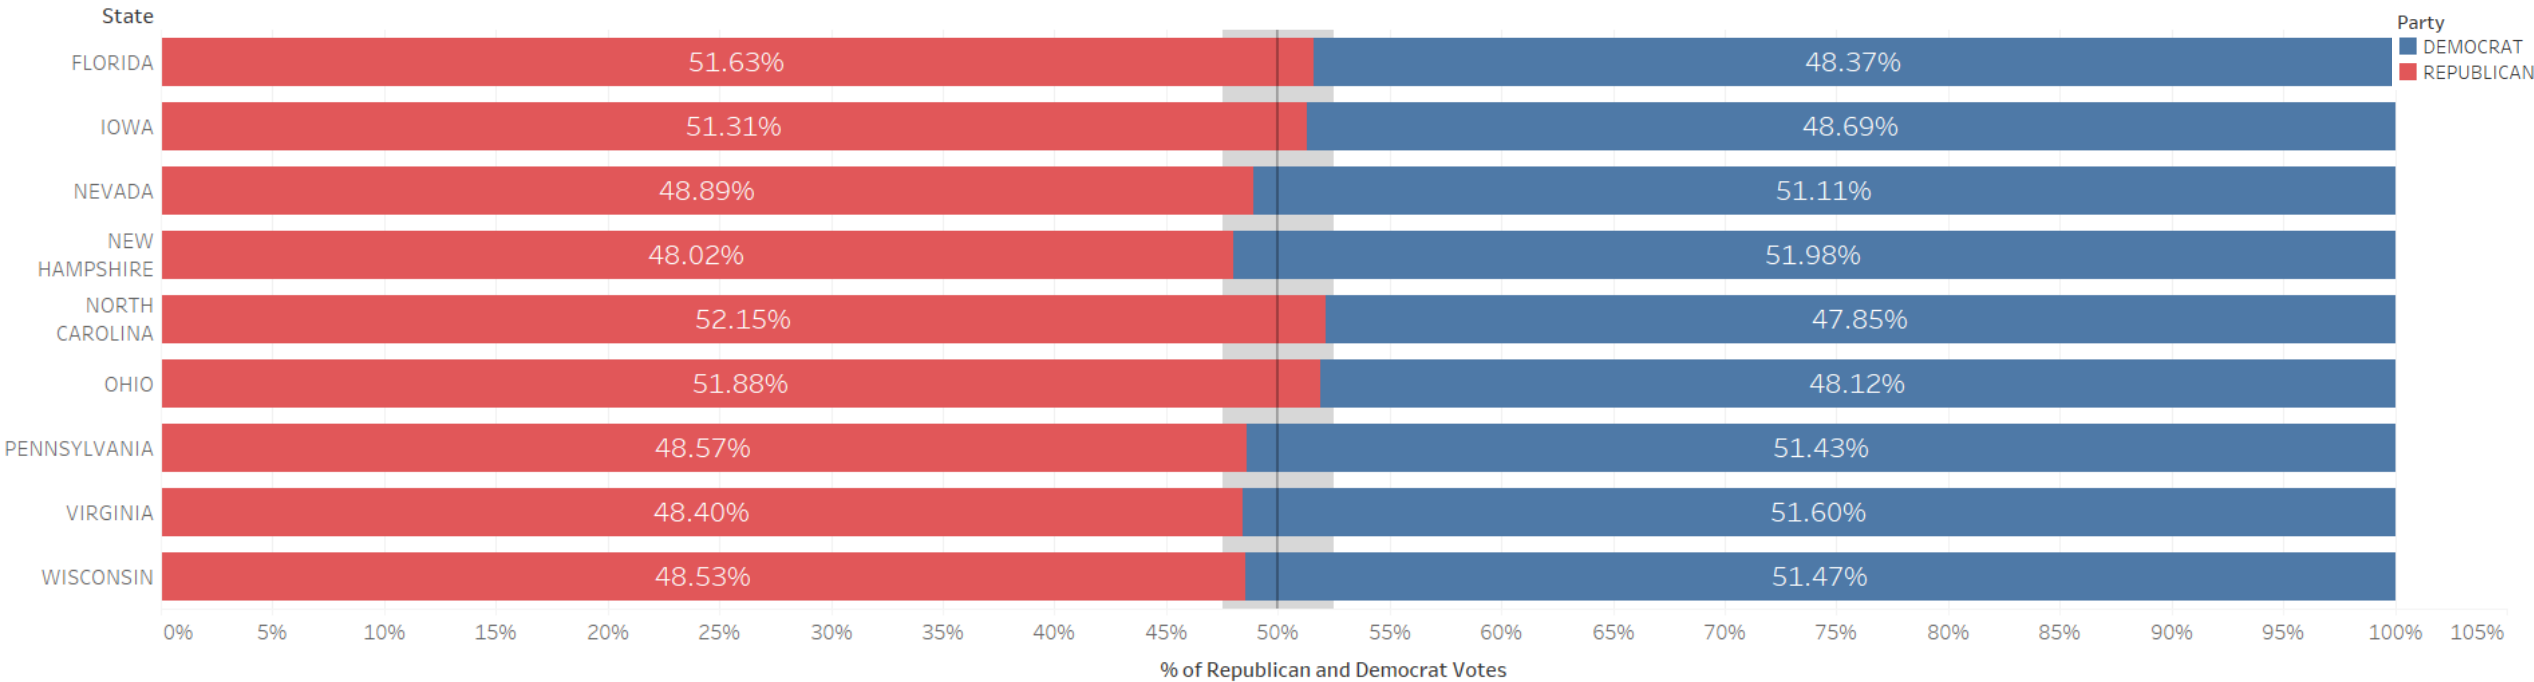

Historically, the party that wins most of the battleground states goes on to win the elections.

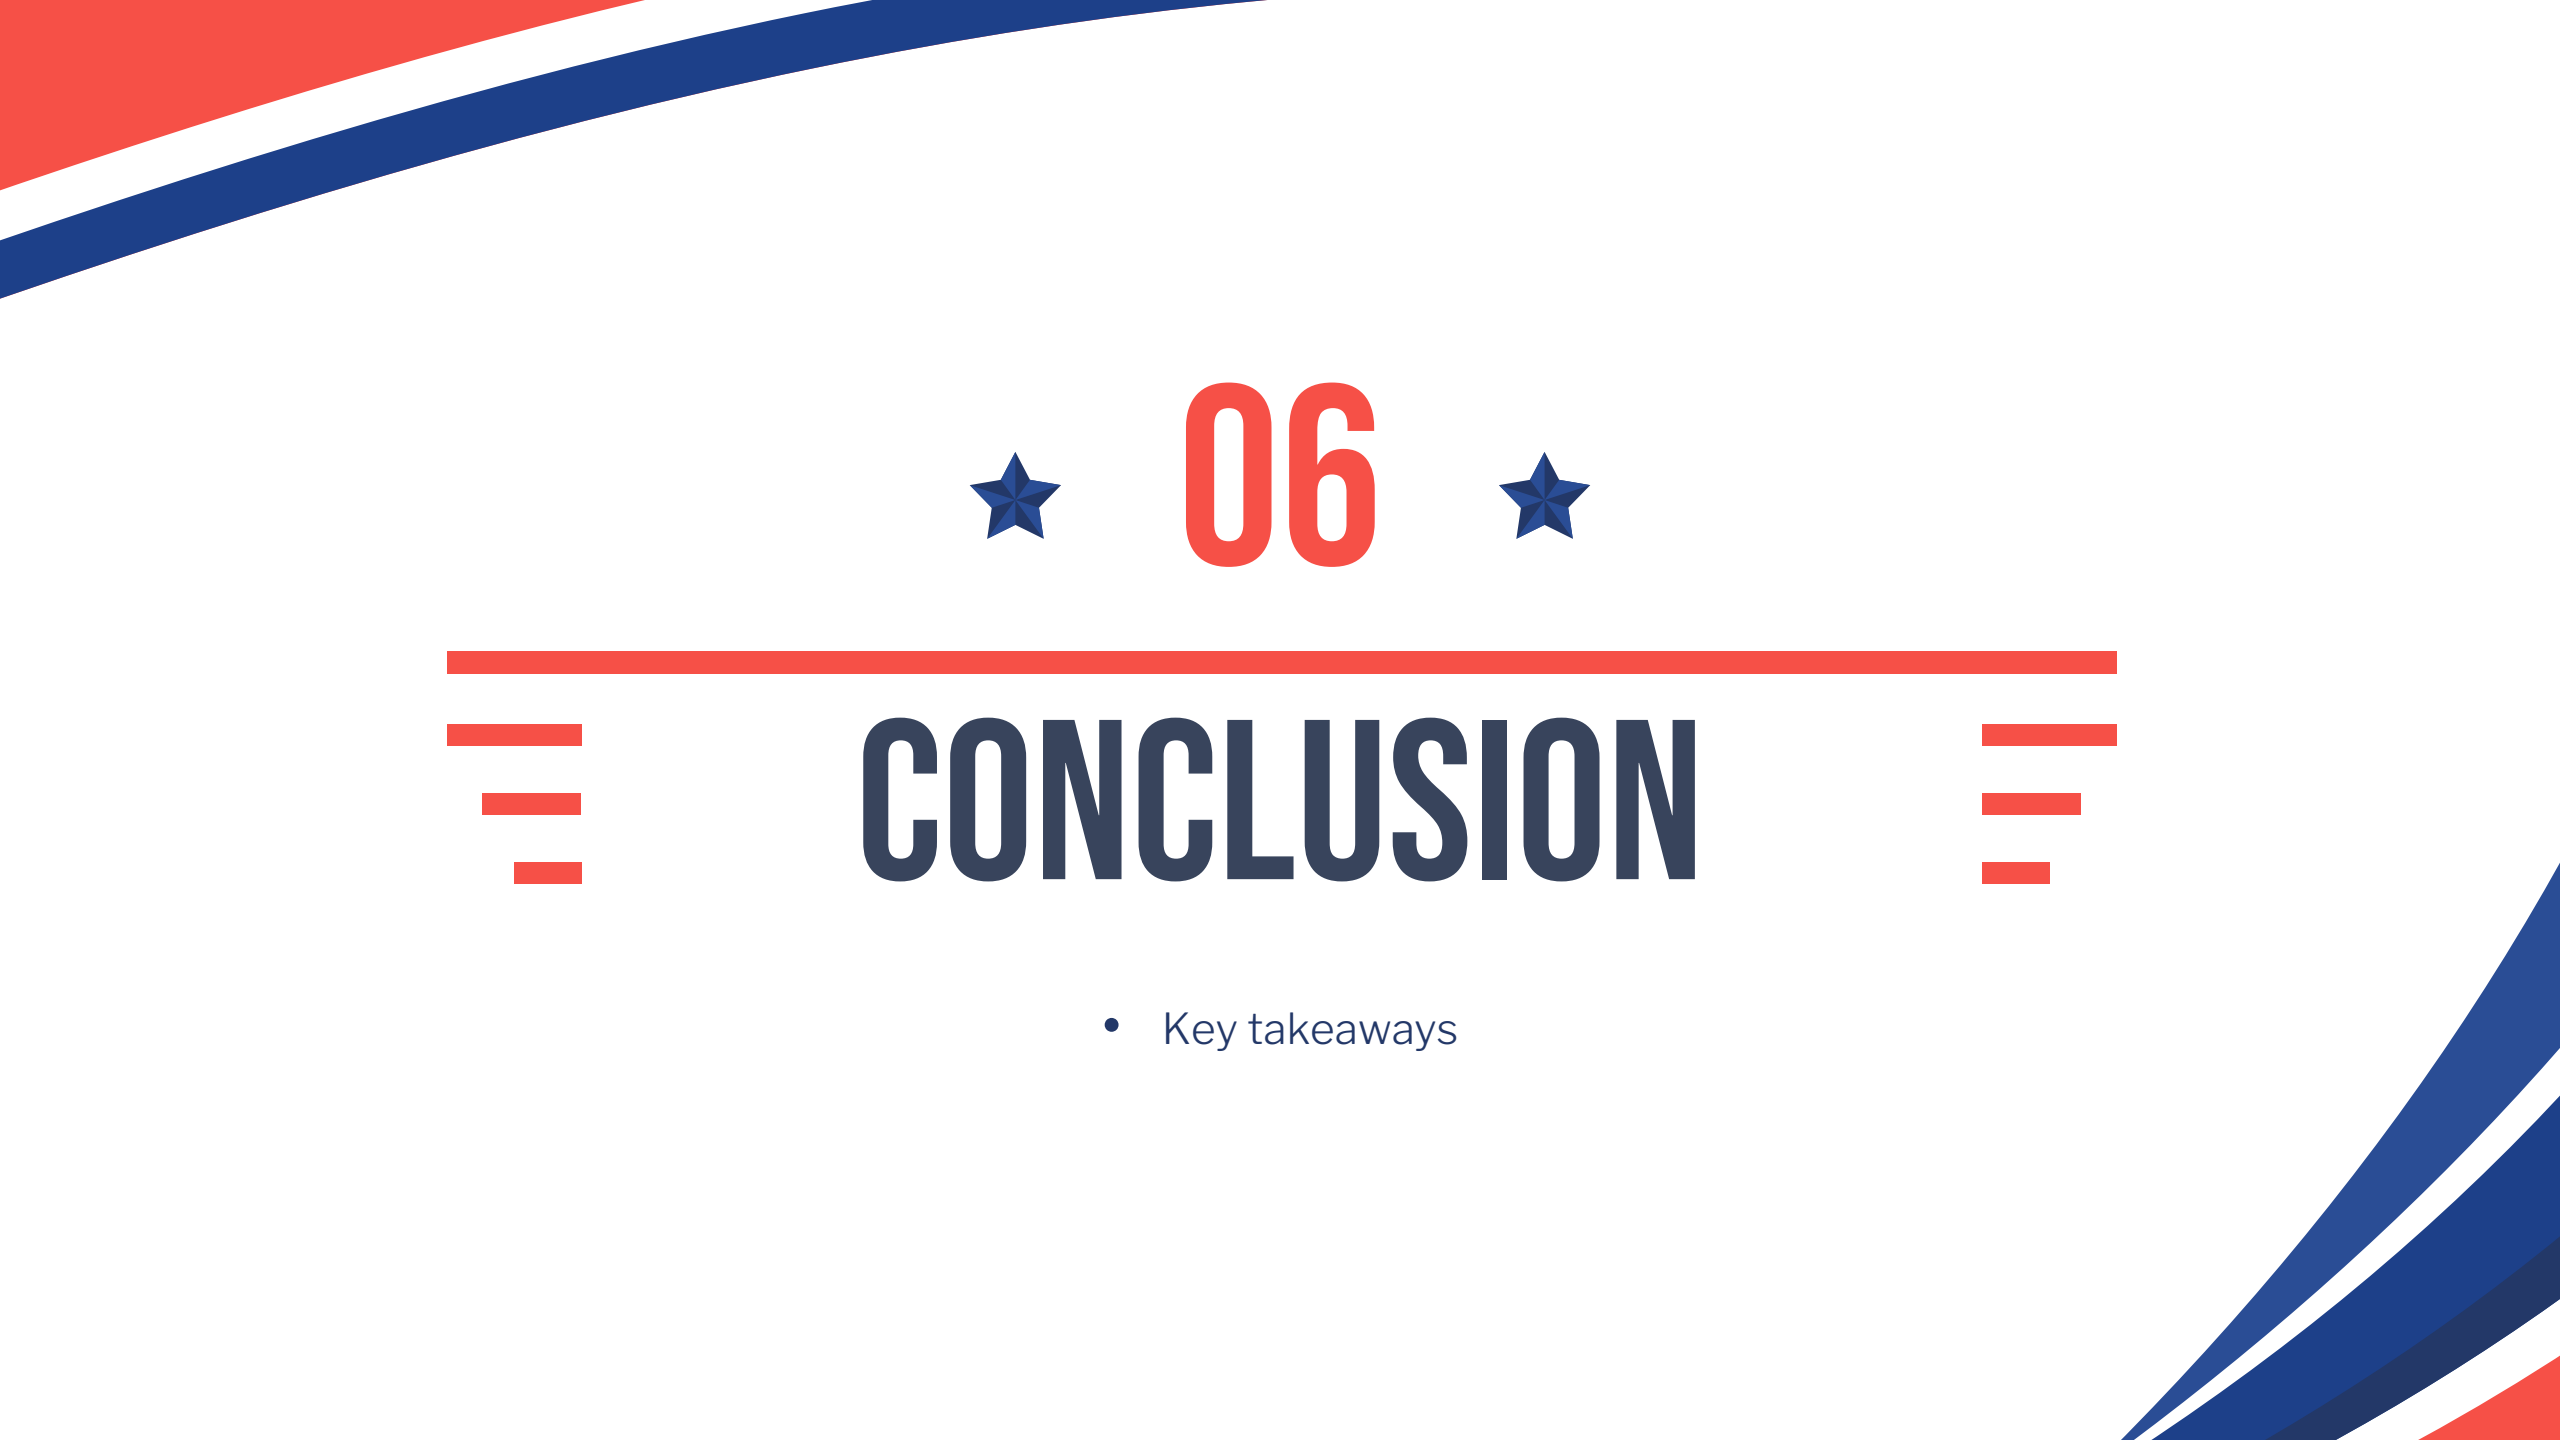

George W. Bush (Republican) Won in 2000

CONSTANT BATTLEGROUND STATES

Battlegrounds change each year, but based on overall trends, these are the states that tend to be tightly contested (margin <5%) and should be focused on.

★ 06 ★

CONCLUSION

- Key takeaways

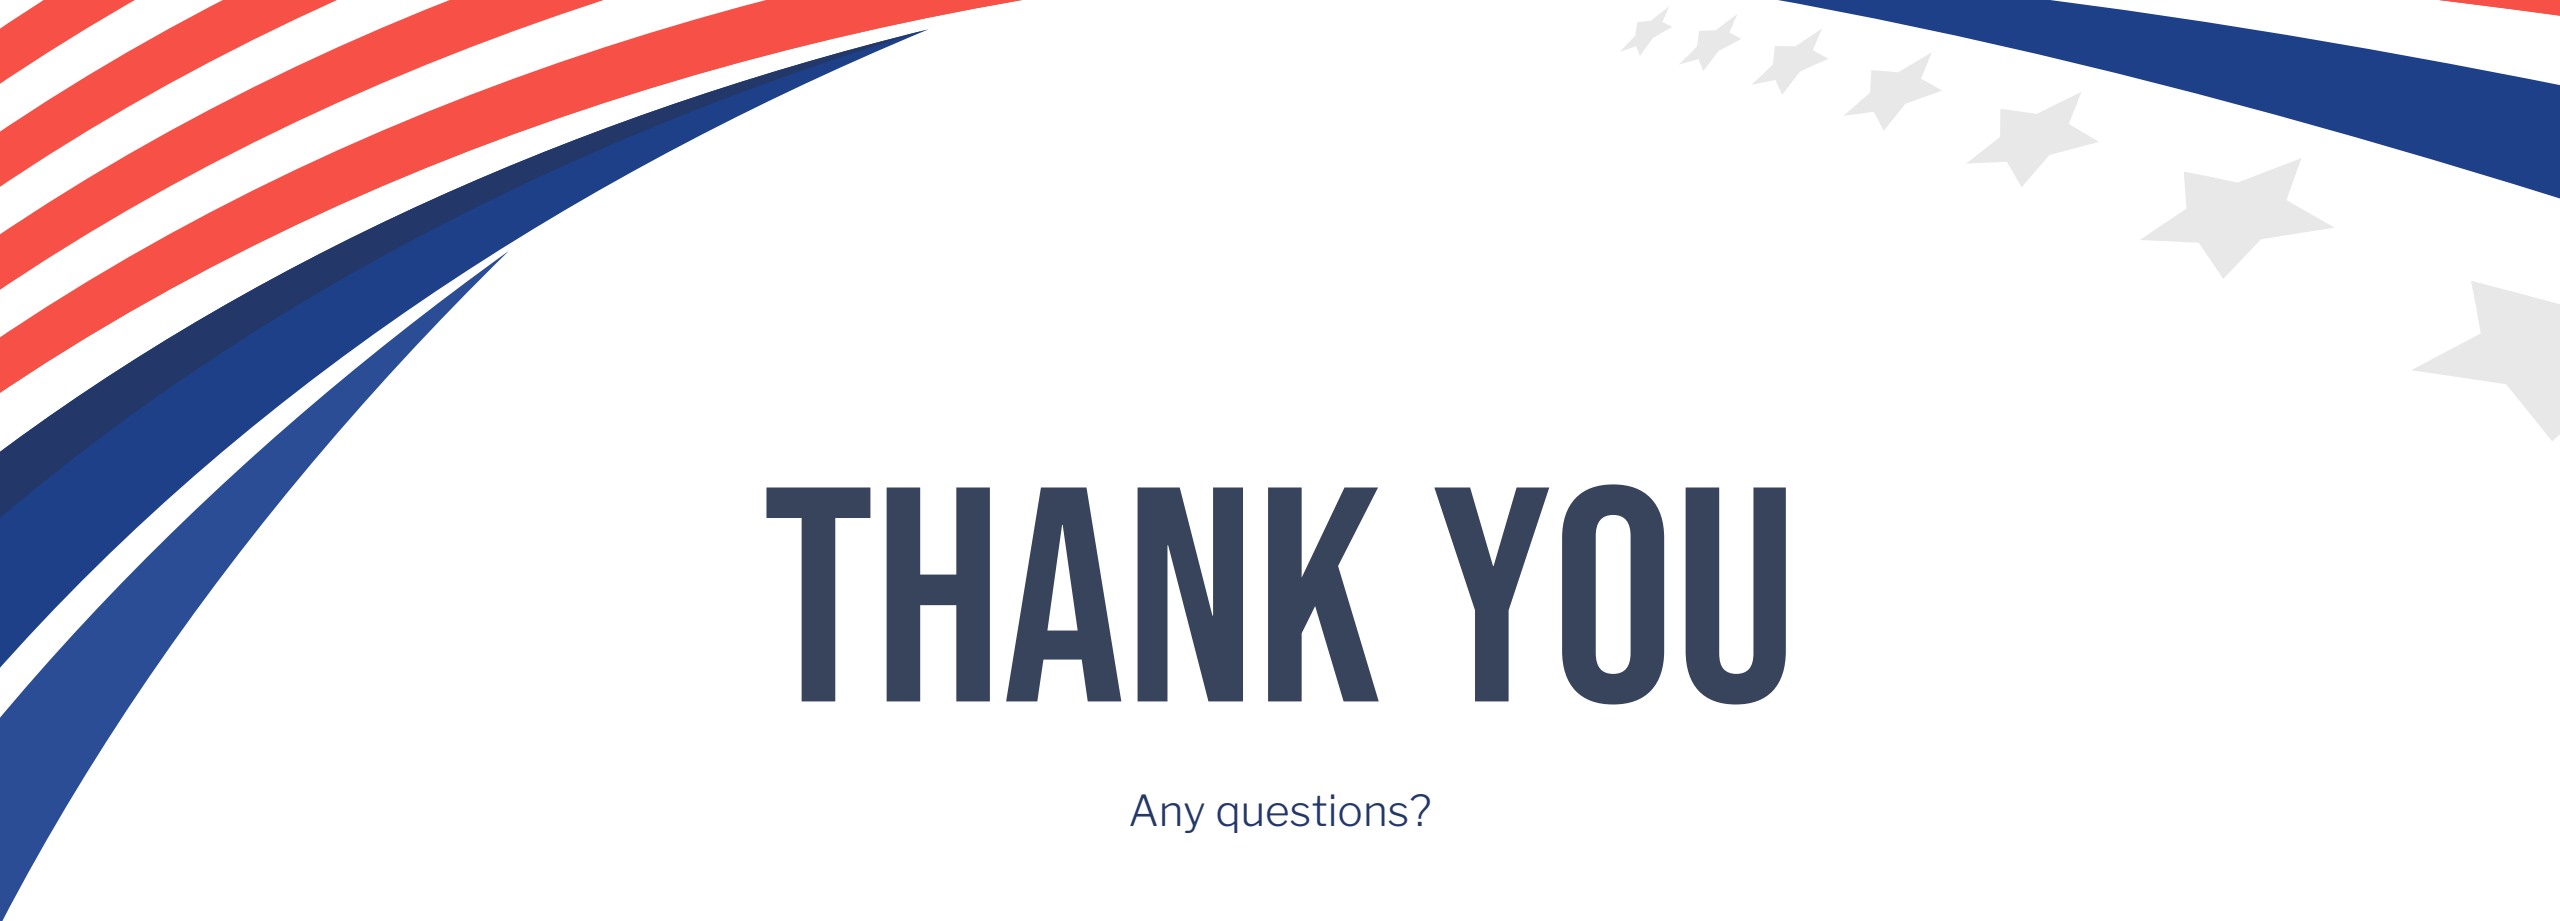

The U.S. Presidential elections in the 21st century is marked by partisanship and polarization.

The balance of power between the Democrats and Republicans is constantly shifting, reflecting the changing political landscape and voter preferences.

Crucially, battleground states can often determine the outcome of the election. Moving forward, candidates should focus significant resources and campaign efforts on these states in future elections.
